Melbourne Water invites all residents to be a part of further community information sessions updating the community on the progress of the Sugarloaf Pipeline Project. If you have any concerns or queries, or simply wish to learn more, we invite you to drop by and meet with a range of project staff, including engineers and designers, who will be able to answer your questions in an informal community setting.

These information sessions are a further opportunity to discuss detailed project information with our engineers and designers including the study and design work prepared to date.

Community input is vital to ensure the project's best possible outcome, so five sessions are being held to give everyone the opportunity to express their views and have their questions answered.

Along with current surveys, your feedback will help determine the path with the least possible environmental, cultural, social and economic impact, in conjunction with a safe and practical engineering route.

We look forward to your contributions.
